Laura Cortez, a single mom, works full-time and takes classes toward an accounting degree for a better income for her family. She meets her dream man on a blind date set up by their siblings but thinks she should have stayed home. When he asks her to his company's Christmas party, she agrees against her better judgment; she's attracted to him despite all the reasons she shouldn't be. Tony Alvarado has spent his life, ever since his marriage, building his accounting firm because his ex-wife nagged him constantly about money.

When she divorced him, claiming he was always working, she took half his money, and his son. Now he believes women only date him because he's rich. His reactions to Laura puzzle him, but he continues to see her because he can't figure her out. Will the holiday season help them forget the liabilities and balance out the miracle of love in adding together two lonely hearts?
