The world ended. It didn't happen with a flash of nuclear fire, nor meteorite impact. But rather with a soft whimper in the cold and dark as a plague nearly swept the earth clean, reclaimed by the walking corpses of those who once dominated the planet. The only survivors, while society and civilization crumbled around them, banded together to face the horrors of the new world they were inheriting. On the college campus of Brown University, faculty and students form a new community following the guiding words of Percival Polz. Percival's mission's a simple one: find food and keep everyone with him alive. A task he'll stop at nothing to accomplish. Whatever It Takes. The college campus became a beacon in the dark, a mote of hope even. But with the winter months looming ever nearer, and without sustainable internal supplies, Percival with a small, well trusted, group of companions is sent out into the zombie wasteland to find supplies, survivors, and the state of their new world past the safety of campus's gates.
