Lady Delia de Wolfe absolutely cannot marry the handsome rake, Roderick Maddox, fourth Duke of Manchester, despite her brother's insistence she do just that. Though he has long reformed his ways, he steals her breath away every time their eyes meet and she simply doesn't deserve that kind of happiness.

Not after the death of her brother, Reginald. She must pay penance, because, if not for her, he would still be alive. Roderick Maddox, has known for years he would marry Delia.

Before Reginald's death, he made a promise to his friend, not only would he care for Reginald's sister, but he would reform himself into the type of man Delia deserved. He never expected Delia to ignite such passion or to be so resistant to him. Nor did he realize he held the secret about Reginald's death that could crush their budding feelings forever.
